GUYANA IN THE MEDIA

NOBODY HANDLES MORE SCOUTS, FILM CREWS, REPORTERS, PRODUCTION TEAMS, AND PHOTOJOURNALISTS IN GUYANA THAN WILDERNESS EXPLORERS.

Operating since 1994, we are Guyana's only Destination Management Company and leading Location Producers.

In fact, we offer unrivalled experience supporting, clearing and managing global media teams working across all three Guianas. Our portfolio of services ranges from the purely practical – location planning, logistics, materiel management, transport, supplies, and staffing – to the more complex challenges of securing governmental permits and approvals, researching content and creating storylines, arranging high-level interviews, chartering aircraft and vehicles, and discretely managing delicate relationships with indigenous communities who may be unfamiliar with western media practices and norms.

We are preferred fixers for the BBC as well as an accredited Disney vendor and in early 2021 supported Dan O'Neill's trip to Guyana to film Last Eden for BBC Earth as well as two major productions for National Geographic. Over the years we have worked with several TV production companies such as Icon Films, Big Earth Productions for CNN, Infocus-Asia, Zero Point Zero, Uplands TV, Ricochet and ITV as well as various independent companies in Europe, North America and Asia.

We have also supported many photojournalists and writers commissioned to write for prestigious publications such as The Sunday Times, The Guardian, Wanderlust, National Geographic Magazine as well as key influencers and bloggers.

6. Get off the beaten track in Guyana

Truly off the beaten track, Guyana is one of South America's least-visited yet most fascinating countries. As one of the continent's best-kept eco-tourism secrets, Guyana is the ideal 2023 destination for travellers seeking adventure.

English-speaking and culturally Caribbean, Guyana's coastal capital Georgetown is a treat. It's home to a variety of heritages, with descendants from Africa and East India, Europe and China, as well as influences from indigenous peoples.

You'll find Dutch and British colonial architecture, cricket and colourful markets on the heritage and cultural side.

For adventurers, the interior includes remote highlands, vast savannas, rainforests and spectacular waterfalls.

3. Guyana

Direct flights between the UK and Guyana begin for the first time on 27 March 2023. For years, South America's only English-speaking nation was not only difficult to reach, but once there, a lack of infrastructure meant penetrating the jungle that makes up 87% of its interior was just as tricky. Forging deep into its forests still isn't easy, but trips via riverboat, 4WD or light plane are opening up one of the world's last great wildernesses, where 800 bird species scatter pristine jungle bursting with jaguars, giant otters and a species of frog smaller than a fingernail that lives its entire life inside a single flower. From the Gothic Revival sights of capital Georgetown to the thundering waters of the single-drop Kaieteur falls, there's plenty to see and a new wave of facilities making it easier than ever for travellers to do so.
